

Getting mums back to work

Become an infant massage instructor

New parents in WA should soon be breathing sighs of relief with the Infant Massage Information Service (IMIS) providing training for a group of 18 infant massage instructors at Royal Perth Hospital in May.

“When qualified, the instructors will provide much-needed assistance and advice to families struggling with unsettled babies,” IMIS president and head trainer Heidi McLoughlin said. “Program participants need no prior training – just a willingness to learn and help new families.”

Becoming an infant massage instructor means that you can teach infant massage parent classes and take private appointments at times that suite you and fit into your family routine. It is a wonderful qualification to have for any parent looking for flexible work that is enjoyable and satisfying.

People interested in becoming an instructor should call IMIS on 1300 137 551 or visit www.babymassage.org.au